“ Gladys and her brother Danny picking crabapples in her garden one sunny afternoon 2015. She was so happy we wanted apples so took a ton home and I made a compote that Dad and I polished off lickety split!
Because the combination was so good I froze the seeds...meanwhile we bought supplies and built a seedbed into which we carefully planted and watered them well. The system would protect them from predators over the winter. He went South and I went to Belgium.
I returned to him before he passed away some months later, and at this time I told him my idea for our seedlings and to this he gave his seal of approval.
I gave some to friends and family then donated the rest, about 250 seedlings, to the Vince Shute Wildlife Sanctuary in Dad's honor. He and I had spent a few hours there the previous Autumn, and later it dawned on me that they were asking people to donate their unwanted fruits so I thought it would be nice they may eventually have some of these fabulous trees for all to enjoy. When I contacted them they happily agreed to plant them and eventually sent photos of them doing so.
Thank you for the delicious crabapples Auntie Gladys...the two varieties together were simply divine, and the joy they gave to us was priceless...God bless your soul.
Love, Cindy
